

Behavior programs showcase showdown

E Source Forum 2019 speaker interview

By Beth Fitzjarrald

November 13, 2019

Can your behavior program deliver 2% savings? What about 3%, 5%, or even 10%? This interactive, rapid-fire session highlighted the latest glitz and glamour in behavior programs and revealed which new programs have real take-home value. Three of your utility peers who have explored new behavioral strategies—including high-bill alerts, prepaid billing for demand-side management, and optimizing home energy reports with connected digital solutions—talked about their successes and challenges.

After the session, we asked Amanda Janaski from BGE and Ebony Whitby from OUC a few questions about their programs. Check out their video responses below.

Amanda Janaski, product manager of behavioral programs, BGE

Our questions for Janaski:

- How does a customized threshold for high-bill alerts help customers manage their bill? (0:11)
 - How has segmentation affected the cost-effectiveness of your energy-efficiency programs? (1:00)
 - How is BGE collecting more and better data to improve behavior programs? (1:26)
 - Can you describe your behavioral demand-response (BDR) program and your behavioral load-shaping pilot? (2:05)
 - How does prepay change the utility/customer relationship? What financial benefits does it have for BGE? (2:33)
-

Ebony Whitby, customer service manager, OUC

Our questions for Whitby:

- How do prepay programs benefit OUC's customers? (0:11)
- How do you communicate with customers who are enrolled in the prepay program? Do you use alerts to help remind them about bills? (1:41)
- How does prepay change the utility/customer relationship? What financial benefits does it have for OUC? (2:55)

© 2008 - 2024 E Source Companies LLC. All rights reserved.
Distribution outside subscribing organizations limited by license.